

Dr. Elaine Mordoch is an Assistant Professor of the Faculty of Nursing, the University of Manitoba. She is interested in how children living with a parent with mental illness manage their experiences and in identifying strategies that can help promote family strengths. She has a long standing interest in the effects on trauma on mental wellness. Her background in psychiatric/mental health nursing includes clinical practice in acute and emergency psychiatry, community work with women in abusive situations, mental health promotion with the well elderly and the mentoring of students interested in psychiatric/ mental health nursing. She has presented her research locally, nationally and internationally.